FROM RESTORES MY SOUL

A 7-Day Reading Plan for Tired Days

Some seasons are heavy. This plan gathers seven short devotionals from Restores My Soul for days when you are worn down or not sure where help will come from. Read one a day in whatever quiet minutes you have.

Day 1	Near
Day 2	Help
Day 3	Carried
Day 4	A place prepared
Day 5	Fed
Day 6	Rest
Day 7	New every morning

DAY 1 · NEAR

Psalm 34:18

> The LORD is near to the brokenhearted and saves the crushed in spirit. (ESV)

HISTORICAL CONTEXT

Psalm 34 begins as one man's thank-you and, partway through, turns into a lesson. The singer reports being rescued, then turns from God to whoever is listening and begins to teach them what he has learned. The line here belongs to that second half.

The heading ties the psalm to the worst stretch of David's life, when he was running from Saul and escaped a Philistine king by feigning madness. What happened right after that escape is easy to overlook. With Saul still hunting him, he hid in a cave at Adullam, and people began coming from the countryside to join him there. His brothers and his father's household came first. Then others followed, and the account describes them plainly: men in trouble, men in debt, men who had grown bitter, about four hundred in all. David became their commander.

So Israel's future king spent those years leading that mixed company, moving between caves and border towns, hunted by a man who held both the throne and the army. Whether or not the psalm was composed in that season, its heading points there, and those four hundred are the kind of people a line like this was meant to reach.

REFLECTION

Where do you look for God when you are at your worst? Most of us look up, ahead, or toward whatever comes after the trouble finally lifts. The psalm points to the trouble itself and says he is already standing in it.

Broken and crushed do more work than a word like sadness. They describe something taken apart that cannot put itself back together, and the second carries the sense of being ground to powder. A person in that condition usually feels like the last candidate for God's attention. The claim here runs in the other direction.

A few lines later, the psalm acknowledges that a righteous life still gathers plenty of trouble, and its answer is rescue from the trouble, not exemption from it. So the nearness it promises says nothing about how long the hard thing will last. It says something about who is standing there while it does.

DAY 2 · HELP

Psalm 121:1-2

> A Song of Ascents. I lift up my eyes to the hills. From where does my help come? My help comes from the LORD, who made heaven and earth. (ESV)

HISTORICAL CONTEXT

Psalm 121 is the second of the Songs of Ascents, fifteen psalms pilgrims are thought to have sung while climbing to Jerusalem for the great festivals. Their eyes were on the hills ahead, and the road ran straight through them. Scholars read those hills two different ways. Some hear a pilgrim looking toward the hills of Jerusalem itself, the destination where God's presence dwelt. Modern study notes point the other way. The high places back then held shrines to other gods. If that reading is right, the question expects the answer no. Either way, the psalm does not stop at the skyline. Help comes from the LORD. He gets the largest title there is: maker of heaven and earth. That covers every hill in view. The rest of the psalm builds on that. It describes a keeper who never sleeps.

REFLECTION

Read the opening again and notice it is a question, not a claim. The psalmist looks at the hills and asks where his help will come from. He is not announcing that it comes from them. You do not have to settle what those hills meant before you pray this psalm. It works no matter what is on your horizon. Everyone's eyes go somewhere first when trouble comes: to the bank balance, the calendar, the person who might call back, the high ground of whatever we trust. The psalm does not scold the first look. It just will not let your eyes stop there. Everything on the horizon is a made thing. Help comes from the one who made it. The second look is the prayer: past the hills, to the one who made them.

DAY 3 · CARRIED

Isaiah 46:4

> even to your old age I am he, and to gray hairs I will carry you. I have made, and I will bear; I will carry and will save. (ESV)

HISTORICAL CONTEXT

The book of Isaiah contains a long series of promises addressed to people from Judah who were living as exiles in Babylon. God himself is the speaker, addressing the remnant of his people directly.

The chapter opens with a scene from that world. Babylon's chief god, Bel (also called Marduk), is loaded onto pack animals along with another Babylonian god, Nebo. They are hauled off like baggage, a weight the beasts must carry. The exiles were living inside the very city that had crushed them. It was a city that paid goldsmiths to make its gods and then carried them from place to place, while their own temple lay in ruins. It would have been easy to ask why they should keep trusting a God who let this happen, when the winning side's gods looked so active and so well provided for.

The chapter answers with a contrast the exiles could not miss. Those gods must be carried by the people who made them, lifted up and set back down, since they cannot move on their own. This God has carried his own people since before they were born, and now he tells this aging, defeated nation that he will keep carrying them to the end.

These words met this situation: a people far from home, surrounded by a rival empire's gods raised in triumph. They were left wondering whether the God who had allowed this to happen was still carrying them at all.

REFLECTION

The point of this verse is clear: God does not wear out on you. From your first breath to your last gray hair, the same God who made you is still carrying you, and he says so without qualification.

That matters because almost everything else that carries you wears out. A parent's strength fades. A body slows down. Even an idol, as pictured in the chapter, must be lifted and set down by the very people who carved it, since it has no strength of its own to move. God turns that picture inside out. Instead of you holding him up with your energy and effort, he is the one doing the carrying, and he does not tire partway through.

So take that into account as you face whatever is wearing you down right now, whether it is the slow grind of age, a difficult diagnosis, or simply a long stretch of hard years. You are not the one holding God up. He is holding you today, as he did at the start, and he will still be carrying you at the end.

DAY 4 · A PLACE PREPARED

John 14:1-3

> “Let not your hearts be troubled. Believe in God; believe also in me. In my Father’s house are many rooms. If it were not so, would I have told you that I go to prepare a place for you? And if I go and prepare a place for you, I will come again and will take you to myself, that where I am you may be also.
>
> (ESV)

HISTORICAL CONTEXT

John's Gospel slows almost to a stop for one evening: the last supper Jesus shared with his disciples, the night before he was executed. Five chapters of the book take place around that one table. The words above come from the very start of that conversation. It is Passover week in Jerusalem, the city packed with pilgrims, and the men who wanted Jesus dead already had their opening, because Judas had just left the table and gone out into the night.

The supper itself had gone wrong in ways the disciples could not miss. Jesus had washed their feet like a household servant, which unsettled them, and then the announcements began. He told them one of them would betray him. He told them he was leaving and that they could not follow. He told Peter that before the rooster crowed he would deny three times that he even knew him.

Remember who was sitting at that table: men who had walked away from fishing boats and a tax booth, who had staked their work, their homes, and years of their lives on him. That night he would be arrested; by the next evening he would be dead. Everything they had signed up for was coming apart in the space of one meal. Whatever comfort was coming would have to land there: not in calm, but in collapse.

REFLECTION

The comfort Jesus offers that night is strange for what it leaves out. There is no explanation of the next day in it, and no rescue from it either. What he gives them instead is a place and his own company: rooms in his Father's house, and a promise to come back and collect them.

The word behind rooms is worth a moment. Older translations said mansions, which sends the mind to size. But the word Jesus used comes from the verb that means to remain, to stay. Heard that way, the promise is about belonging: a place with him that lasts, prepared before you arrive.

When trouble comes, people want answers, and the men at that table wanted them badly. That night Jesus offered them something else: himself, and a request to trust him before they understood. On some nights that is the only comfort that actually holds.

DAY 5 · FED

Matthew 6:26

> Look at the birds of the air: they neither sow nor reap nor gather into barns, and yet your heavenly Father feeds them. Are you not of more value than they? (ESV)

HISTORICAL CONTEXT

Matthew's Gospel records a long block of Jesus' teaching in chapters five through seven, usually called the Sermon on the Mount, placed in the first half of his ministry in Galilee. Large crowds had been following him from Galilee, the Decapolis, Jerusalem, Judea, and the region beyond the Jordan. Seeing them, Jesus went up a mountain and sat down, and his disciples came to him. When he finished speaking, the crowds were astonished, because he taught with a kind of authority they had not heard from their usual teachers.

Part of that teaching lands on a specific worry: what to eat, what to drink, what to wear. Jesus had just said that no one can serve both God and money. He then turned to a pressure that competes for that same loyalty every day, the fear of not having enough to live on. That is the situation Jesus speaks into: ordinary, daily anxiety, aimed at people wondering whether they can count on being fed and clothed.

REFLECTION

Look at the birds, Jesus says. They do not plant a crop, bring in a harvest, or store food away for later, and God feeds them anyway. If God provides for a bird, he will provide for you, and you matter to him more than a bird ever could.

Planning and working for a living still matter. Jesus is pointing to where your trust should rest while you keep doing that work. He is not asking you to quit it and wait for a meal to appear.

Loosen your grip today on the bill you cannot yet cover, the job that feels shaky, or the meal you are not sure you can put on the table. Take that worry to the Father who feeds the birds, and go back to your ordinary work with it resting on him instead of on you.

DAY 6 · REST

Psalm 4:8

> In peace I will both lie down and sleep; for you alone, O LORD, make me dwell in safety. (ESV)

HISTORICAL CONTEXT

This psalm carries a heading that marks it for the choir director, to be sung with stringed instruments, and names David. The heading does not specify the occasion, so nothing here rests on a specific year or story from his life.

The pressure inside the psalm is clear enough on its own terms. People were turning the psalmist's honor into shame, spreading empty talk and lies about him. Rather than firing back, he told them to feel their anger without letting it turn into sin. He also told them to think it over quietly on their own beds, and then to keep silent.

That is a striking request. He wanted his accusers to take his case into the quiet of their own beds and sit with it there, rather than running their mouths by day. He also said his own joy did not depend on the good harvest or full supply others were counting on for security.

The psalm closes with a decision, made right after he told his accusers to feel their anger without sinning and to search their own hearts in silence at night. He will lie down and sleep, trusting God alone for his safety. That decision is worth noting, since a man who announces he will sleep has chosen rest over continued self-defense.

REFLECTION

Read the closing line on its own, and the point still holds. A person under real strain says he can lie down and actually sleep. That only makes sense if his rest depended on something other than the outcome of the conflict.

There is an honest question buried in how to translate this line. Some versions place the emphasis on God, saying he alone keeps the psalmist safe. The Hebrew word behind "alone" can also describe the psalmist himself: a man dwelling apart, without other defenders, safe only because God is present. Both readings point beyond the psalmist toward God. Scholars have not settled which reading the line intends, and it is fair to leave the question open.

Anyone who has lain awake replaying an argument or worrying about what people are saying about them knows exactly what is being described here. The psalmist leaves his accusers and his reputation exactly where they were; nothing about the conflict is resolved. What changes is that he can rest anyway, because his peace was never tied to that outcome. That is worth remembering the next time an unresolved problem keeps you up.

DAY 7 · NEW EVERY MORNING

Lamentations 3:22-23

> The steadfast love of the LORD never ceases; his mercies never come to an end; they are new every morning; great is your faithfulness. (ESV)

HISTORICAL CONTEXT

Lamentations is a collection of five poems mourning the destruction of Jerusalem, torn apart by an invading army between 587 and 586 BC. The poems were written afterward, once the siege had ended, though its memory was still fresh. The temple was gone, and the king, the nobles, the priests, and the prophets who had led the nation were disgraced along with it.

The third poem begins with a man describing his suffering in stark terms. He said God had walled him in and made his chains heavy. He said his cries for help went unheard, that God would not listen. He said his strength had given out, along with any hope he once had that the LORD would come through for him. This was someone who had run out of reasons to expect anything good.

Then, right before today's verse, he said that recalling one thing gave him hope again. Nothing around him had changed yet.

REFLECTION

The point is plain: God's love has not run out, and it does not arrive worn down from the day before. Every morning, it is new again.

The poem does not say the speaker's situation had improved. The city was still destroyed, and he continued to grieve for many verses after this point. He chose to remember something true first, before anything around him changed. He brought it to mind even though nothing he could see gave him a reason to hope.

You do not need your circumstances to turn around before you allow yourself to hope. Wherever you are today, you can remember what has held true before, and let that be your starting point.

If this plan helps, you can get one short devotional like these in your inbox each morning, free. Each one explains where the verse came from, what it meant then, and what it means now. Sign up at restoresmysoul.com.

Scripture quotations are from the ESV® Bible (The Holy Bible, English Standard Version®), © 2001 by Crossway, a publishing ministry of Good News Publishers. ESV Text Edition: 2025. The ESV text may not be quoted in any publication made available to the public by a Creative Commons license. The ESV may not be translated in whole or in part into any other language. Used by permission. All rights reserved.